Laminate Flooring. The core material of the flooring is typically made of High Density Fiberboard (HDF). The top layer is a photographic layer that should appear identical to the product it replicates, be it wood, vinyl, tile, etc. The flooring can vary in thickness, generally between 7mm - 12.3 mm thick. The majority of laminate floors feature a floating installation with a tongue and groove glueless locking system. This type of flooring is typically the least expensive.
